

Nana Star and Moonman Dazzle the Crowd

Nana Star and Moonman say hello to children young and old.

Hearts, young and old, were touched on April 27th by the wonderfully sweet performance of “Nana Star” and her friend, the “Moonman” at the 1st Annual “Protect Our Children” Rally & Fair at Centennial Park, Ft. Myers. Children stared in awe as they listened intently to Elizabeth Sills, co-author dressed as “Nana Star,” read the adorable story about the character and her mild-mannered friend, The Moonman, played by good sport David Plazas of The News-Press.

Elizabeth Sills and her sister and co-author, Elena Patrice, own ee publishing & productions, “the laugh-friendly company,” publishers of the book, and are dedicated, in business and in life, to children and to their mission of “increasing children’s prospects for success in school and in life.” These generous, committed women volunteered to come all the way from Virginia to SW Florida to help The Children’s Network and The News-Press launch their first fair to commemorate Child Abuse Prevention Month. Nana Star and company donated their time, performances and over 500 copies of their beautiful book (with CD included), which they gave away to children who attended the fair.

ee (pronounced “double e”) publishing & productions company specializes in writing and publishing children’s books and developing toys with the concept that “the world would be a happier place if kids got to be kids just a little bit longer...” The company hosts a charitable foundation, The Nana Star Foundation, which is involved in the enrichment of under-resourced schools and helping terminally ill children and their families, and they have given to numerous charities and non-profit organizations across the country. The books, the foundation and the whole company has basically been a family affair since the creation of Nana Star by Elizabeth Owens, the pairs’ grandmother, who developed the characters and story for her grandson. Elizabeth’s daughter, Linda Saker, is the illustrator and mother of Elena and Elizabeth who now run the company. All of their information can be found at www.Nanastar.com or www.eppcompany.com along with their characters, books, toys and their beautiful photos.
